This week we have eight of the nine ships on the ocean, as the Buffalo makes ready to sail. We also have a rare insight into the thoughts and feelings of one of the ordinary emigrants who is traveling in steerage.

Rosina Ferguson and her husband have left their native Scotland to travel to Portsmouth where they have boarded the Buffalo. Although a little annoyed that the 'ladies and gentlemen' travelling with them have been much slower to board, she is generally content, and is gratified that a woman in her 'station in life' has been shown 'every kindness'. The berth sound very small and cramped to us now, only six feet by four, and separated by flimsy canvas sheeting. Rosina says they are like her 'mother's hens nests', but she is grateful for her health and for her husband - 'one of the kindest and best of husbands I could desire'. 'We can't help but hope that all will go well for her

[Captain Robert Morgan, on board the Duke of York wrote.]

This 24 hours gentle breezes from the SSE plesent weather all sail set steering SWd Obsd a distance bet ween the Å and Å gives our longitude 21.55 West Lattd Obsd 30 miles South in the afternoon the people came on deck and commenced the old heathen practice of shaving which I disapproved off before them last night they sluced ceveral with water and was going down in the cabin to bring up the steerage passengers which I prevented by steping forward and stoping they went away and broke up thier game my sperit was greaved but I felt it my duty to stand before the leaders of this affair and if a thousand had bing before me I felt confident thet Lord was on my side and I whould not fear what man could do unto me ...

in the afternoon the people stood in the middle of the deck and gave three cheers for the Captn three

Past meets present online

Outcomes

- Connecting up geographic communities around history
- New skills and networks
- Intergenerational learning
- Connecting up communities of interest:
 - Descendants from first ships; trains; embroiderers
